

The Big Pizza Cookery Book

INTRODUCTION

This Pizza book will take us on a magical trip to Italy.

The Italians say that eating is the second most beautiful and important thing in the world. The cave men baked bread which looked like a pizza, a round flat dough-cake made from flour and water, baked on red-hot stones.

The classic pizza as we know it today is about 300 years old. The ancient Egyptians taught the Greeks the art of baking bread.

Soon the Greeks surpassed their teachers and began to enrich the dough with spices, oils, eggs and herbs. They were also the first to cover the dough with toppings before baking, thus turning the pizza into a main course.

The Italians were equally inventive where good eating and making the most of very little were concerned.

The cuisine of the region around Naples offers delicacies that are appealing to the taste buds as well as to the eye. The harbour town of Naples is the culinary centre of Southern Italian cuisine.

The classic pizza owes its existence not least to the discovery of the tomato which was brought to Europe from Mexico.

The cook who first refined the slightly dull dough cake with pureed tomatoes, oil, salt and a little cheese was, of course, a Neapolitan.

Many of his fellow citizens loved the new recipe and copied it.

Thus the best-known pizza, the pizza Napoletana, was born.

Today the pizza has fans all over the world.

In Naples you don't eat pizza at home, you go out to a pizzeria, a meeting place for rich and poor, young and old. Each region and every housewife in Italy has their own personal recipes to spoil even pizza connoisseurs.

You can find a huge variety of flavours and shapes; but whether the pizza is round, angular or square the most important thing is the taste.

The pizzaiolo follows three basic rules in order to make a genuine pizza:

- you can only make pizza with yeast dough
- only the surface of the dough may come into contact with the topping
- it's best to bake the pizza as quickly as possible in a very hot wood-fired oven.

Apart from the Pizza Napoletana, the best-known pizza is the Margherita. This took its name from Margherita, the wife of King Umberto of Savoy, who first tasted the delicious dish in Naples in the 19th century.

It is topped with ripe tomatoes and fresh mozzarella, and the pizza is rounded off with olive oil and pecorino (ewes' milk cheese).

The pizza as we know it today has developed to its present state of perfection over the centuries. Try the crisp dough with its juicy toppings for yourself and you will soon see why pizza has so many fans all over the world.

As they say, the proof of the pizza is in the eating - especially in good company and with a glass of wine!

We hope you'll enjoy cooking (and eating) the delicious dishes suggested in the following recipes!

THE PIZZA DOUGH

250 g flour
 1/8 l water
 20 g yeast
 a pinch of sugar
 a pinch of salt
 2-3 tablesp. olive oil

Sift the flour into a bowl and make a hollow in the centre. Mix the yeast, sugar and lukewarm water in the hollow, dust the mixture with a little flour and leave to rise for approximately 30 minutes.

Knead all the ingredients into a dough and leave to rise for another 30 minutes.

Knead again, roll out, put into a greased baking tin and leave to rise again for approximately 15 minutes. Then spread with toppings of your choice.

If you don't want to spend so much time preparing the dough, here's a tip to save time: just buy some frozen ready-to-bake pizza dough from your nearest supermarket!
